Algorithm for calculating and checking the check digit

Footnote. Appendix 2 - as amended by the Resolution of the Board of the National Bank of the Republic of Kazakhstan dated November 30, 2020 No. 139 (shall be enforced from December 16, 2020).

1. When calculating the check digit, the international standard (Modulus 97-10, ISO-7064) is used, which involves dividing a number by 97, the resulting remainder of the division is subtracted from 98. If the result is a single digit, one leading zero is added.

Example #1.

Calculate the check digit of the bank account of a bank client, a branch of a non-resident bank of the Republic of Kazakhstan KZ CC 123 1234564567891.

Step one: the first four characters are transferred to the end of the bank account number of a bank client, a branch of a non-resident bank of the Republic of Kazakhstan, the country code designation is converted based on the table for converting alphabetic characters into digital characters in accordance with Appendix 1 to the Rules for opening, maintaining and closing customer bank accounts, the second two characters are denoted by zeros. Result:

123 1234564567891 2035 00.

Step two: the number obtained above is divided by 97 and the remainder of the division is 43.

Step three: $98 - 43 = 55$.

The check digit is 55.

Client's bank account number KZ 55 123 1234564567891.

Example #2.

Calculate the check digit of the client's bank account KZ CC 123 1234565678902.

Step one: the first four characters are transferred to the end of the customer's bank account number, the country code is converted based on the table for converting alphabetic characters into digital characters in accordance with Appendix 1 to the Rules for opening, maintaining and closing customer bank accounts, the second two characters are indicated by zeros. Result:

123 1234565678902 2035 00.

Step two: the number obtained above is divided by 97 and the remainder of the division is 90.

Step three: $98 - 90 = 8$.

The check digit is 8, to which the preceding "0" is added.

Client's bank account number KZ 08 123 1234565678902.

2. When checking the correctness of the check digit, the international standard (Modulus 97-10, ISO-7064) is used, which involves finding the remainder of dividing a number by 97.

Applying the table for converting alphabetic characters into digital characters in accordance with Appendix 1 to the Rules for opening, maintaining and closing bank accounts of clients, the remainder of dividing the bank account number by the number 97 is found. If the bank account number is correctly indicated, the remainder is 1 (one).

Example:

Check the check digit in the customer's bank account number.

KZ55 1231 2345 6456 7891

Step one: the first four characters are transferred to the end of the client's bank account number, the country code is converted based on the table for converting alphabetic characters into digital characters in accordance with Appendix 1 to the Rules for opening, maintaining and closing bank accounts of clients:

1231 2345 6456 7891 2035 55.

Step Two: Divide the above number by 97. The result is $1231234564567891203555/97 = 12693139840906094882.010309278351$.

From the received number, the whole part is selected without rounding 12693139840906094882.

Step three: The number obtained in the second step is multiplied by 97 and it turns out $12693139840906094882 * 97 = 1231234564567891203554$.

Step four: From the number obtained in step one, the number obtained in step three is subtracted. If the result is 1 (one), the check digit is calculated correctly. In this example, the result is $1231234564567891203555 - 1231234564567891203554 = 1$. Check digit 55 is correct.
